

Say hello to...

Staying up-to-date with the latest research and thinking

Find out how your Alumni Library Online can help you to stay informed on the latest research and thinking in your industry to enhance your personal and professional development.

Keeping up-to-date with the latest developments in your chosen field is important for your career development. With free access to a wide range of resources, your Alumni Library Online (ALO) can help you to get ahead by staying informed about the latest research and thinking in your industry.

Taking on board new ideas, continuing to develop your expertise and discovering opportunities to improve within your function can help you to progress in your career, enhances your own personal sense of growth and job satisfaction and can also help you to contribute to the overall success of your organisation by applying the latest thought-leadership to implement innovation and change.

Five ways to use the ALO to stay up-to-date in your field or industry:

Access the most recent journals

Got a specific publication in mind? Using the ALO database, you can access full-text articles and papers free of charge.

Find materials specifically related to your area of interest

Perform a key word search to find all the available articles that relate to your subject area – you can even arrange by date to get the very latest insights.

Browse open access journals

Check out the eJournals area in the General Resources section.

Discover the latest research

Find out about the latest research happening at Cranfield by searching CERES and CORD, or use resources such as eTHOS and OpenDOAR to see UK and worldwide research in your area.

Set up journal alerts

Stay on the pulse and get notified about the latest publications. Use resources such as JournalTOCs to set up an email alert whenever a new issue of your chosen journal is published.

Ready to access the latest thinking and research?
Visit www.cranfield.ac.uk/alo to get started.