Gender pay gap 2020 explained

Each year we publish information on the pay gap between men and women working at Cranfield. Our figures are based on a data 'snapshot' taken on the same date each year – 31 March. The pay gap is the percentage difference between the average hourly earnings of men and women across the University. This is different to equal pay, which shows whether there are differences in pay between men and women doing comparable work.

It is encouraging to see a year-on-year reduction in our pay gap, with the median falling by 1.7% and the mean by 0.8% in 2020. While our workforce composition and pay structure remain similar to 2019, we did research various aspects of how we close the gap, we are striving to address this. We have put in place a coordinated plan to medium and longer-term actions to support our equality, diversity and inclusion agenda and, in turn, help address our pay gap.

Pay gap

Our pay gap is influenced by the profile of our workforce, with more males in senior roles, occupied with a lower number of females in the same type of roles (Chart 1 refers). We have seen a significant improvement in our median pay gap, due to an increase in the proportion of females in the upper quartile pay band (Chart 2 refers) and a slight improvement on last year. We recognise there is still much to be done, but we are optimistic that our planned actions will help to reduce the gap further.

Bonus pay gap

Proportion of employees receiving a bonus

There are two types of bonus payments:

Recognition award
This is open to all staff and is based on exceptional performance.

Bonus scheme
The bonus scheme for senior managers is based on the achievement of key targets which includes areas such as income and business generation.

Positively, a higher proportion of women (20.9%) were awarded a bonus payment in recognition of their contribution, compared to men (17.6%). Due to the uneven nature of our workforce distribution, with more males occupying senior levels, in real terms those bonus payments were lower than those received by male colleagues because they are typically a percentage of salary.

During 2017/18, the University faced a challenging year and financial constraints were applied to bonus pay. This is reflected in the 2018 figures. In 2019 and 2020 the 2020 Strategy has been reflected in the payments we made and number of awards.

While we publish figures on bonus payment under our statutory duty, this doesn't reflect our other forms of recognition – promotion, accelerated increments and moves into the high performance zone at each salary level.

Difference in bonus payment between men and women

Proportion of men and women in each pay quartile

The quartiles are calculated by ranking male and female employees from the lowest hourly rate of pay (Q1) to the highest (Q4) and then dividing this into four equal parts. If there is a difference between the proportion of men and women in each quartile, this will influence the overall pay gap. Chart 3 shows the pay gap at each individual level.

In our comparators, the 2020 figures were:

While we have a greater proportion of women in the lower quartiles, it's encouraging to see more women moving into the upper quartiles. This is due to our focused recruitment and development activities as outlined in our Athena Swan and Diversity Action Plans. This year, we have also seen a reduction in the upward trend of female appointments and women in the pipeline who have been promoted.

Factors affecting our pay gap

Factors

- Workforce composition
  - We have more women at levels 1 -4 than men.
  - We have more men at levels 5-9 than women, particularly in our academic community.
- Only 22% of our academics are female.
- Only 13% of our Professorial staff are female.

- Small female pipeline exists in some of the science, technology and engineering disciplines we operate in.
- Under-representation of females in science, technology and engineering disciplines, both in the sector and at Cranfield.
- Timeframes for developing research/ academic capabilities to support academic promotion can be lengthy.
- Historically, there has been a low turnover of men at senior levels meaning there have been limited opportunities to appoint women into senior posts.
- Recruitment is challenging in certain areas.
- We ensure that recruitment panels include at least one female, where possible.

Female/male split by salary level

Flexible working

During the past 12 months

- In our conversations, we have reiterated our commitment to flexible working and encouraged staff to discuss their requirements. Many roles can be completed at different times or in different ways. Numerous webinars have been made available to support staff with caring responsibilities and working from home, as well as generally adjusting to working in a new way.
- With homeworking for new and existing staff, we have made flexible working adjustments, for example, providing guidance to provide additional advice on how to work from home safely and effectively.
- For a second year, we took part in the 2020 Employer Network for Equality Benchmark survey about our flexible working practices. The University's score was first and we were placed as a leader, coming 35th out of 70 entries. Only one University was in the top 35.

Outreach

During the past 12 months

- We formed a community and public engagement working group to help us develop our outreach activities and initiatives. Currently the group is reinvigorating our STEM ambassador programme and we have encouraged our colleagues to help them get involved with community and public engagement.

Ongoing initiatives

- We have invested in dedicated staff time to support the development and delivery of our outreach activities, including a new role, a key element of which is focused on diversity and inclusion.
- We continue to support colleagues to engage with activity which promotes gender diversity, for example Women in Science.
- We continue our active role and sponsorship of International Women in Engineering Day (INWED) on 23 June. In the 2021 campaign, we will highlight our different roles talking about why they love their job and how to get into a STEM career.

Development

During the past 12 months

- We returned our HR Excellence in Research Award (HRS4R) to the European Commission. Our ongoing commitment to the support and career development of our researchers.
- In collaboration with VITAE, we ran the Culture, Employment and Development in Academic Research Survey (CEDARS), to find out about the experiences of our researchers. The survey highlighted issues and views on career development opportunities. The results will help us create a healthy and supportive research culture to retain our researchers can thrive.

Ongoing initiatives

- We provide investment into leadership development through the Cranfield Leadership Foundation's Aurora programme, which supports women at Leader grade to develop the skills and successes evidenced through an assessment process.
- We have embedded diversity into promotion and succession planning for all academic posts to ensure that our processes are fair, transparent and provide equality of opportunity.
- Our Career Development group continues to advance initiatives in support of career development opportunities. These have included the launch of a University-wide mentoring scheme and a review of career pathways, which will lead to a revised talent programme.
- Our staff networks – Step Up network, Researchers Unit and Apprentice Forum – are going from strength to strength.

Seeking the views of our community

During the past 12 months

- We recognise the value of seeking the views of our staff community and have run a number of listening events, focus groups and surveys to find out what is doing well and what we could do better to attract and retain the most diverse talent from all communities.
- We held a series of focus groups with our local Black, Asian and Minority Ethnic (BAME) staff to find out what members of Cranfield as an employer, as well as with our own staff to explore the realities of working at Cranfield. These were conducted by an external diversity and inclusion consultancy to enable honest and open discussion and the output will feed into our action plans.
- We have formed a new disabled staff network to complement the range of networks already in place. This will help to enhance disability awareness and support the implementation of our equality, diversity and inclusion strategy.

Snapshot of what we are doing to help close the gap

Recruitment and selection

Ongoing initiatives

- We continue our positive action statements to attract more women to roles where there is evidence of gender under-representation. In our latest recruitment campaigns, we have seen more women applied following the use of similar roles in the past which was extremely encouraging.
- We have updated recruitment materials (job descriptions, role profiles and adverts and further particulars) to ensure more consistency in the way we write people and inclusion is reflected in our choices of images and language.
- We brief recruitment panels on techniques to attract more diverse talent and challenge shortlists which may not be attracting a range of applicants.
- We have broadened the recruitment channels we use to enable us to attract more diverse talent.
- We ensure that recruitment panels include at least one female, where possible.

Values and behaviours

- We believe that by communicating and embedding our shared values of Ambition, Impact, Respect and Collaboration, we can help employees to feel empowered to make a difference as it will support the transition towards becoming a truly inclusive and inspiring employer.

Ongoing initiatives

- We continue to embed our values into our recruitment and selection processes, to filter and showcase to them in action through our internal and external communications. We encourage candidates, after each day that they were attracted to Cranfield because they share the same values.
- There have been many initiatives and activities to ensure colleagues remain connected while they are physically apart. Our internal communications has never been so strong and this was reflected in the results of our 2020 staff survey. Overall, feedback also showed some positive trends, including an increase in pride and the number of colleagues who would recommend Cranfield as a great place to work, the sense of community and feeling appreciated in our '2020 year in review'.

Pay and reward

During the past 12 months

- As part of our wider equality, diversity and inclusion initiatives, we have reviewed our ethnicity pay gap and will continue to do so annually. We will continue our work with key stakeholders to maintain progress.
- We have continued to make adjustments to pay levels to ensure equity on the pay structure in relation to the National Living Wage.
- We have undertaken a review of our pay framework in conjunction with external consultants, and will work with our trade union partners so that we can respond flexibly.
- Despite the challenges of the coronavirus pandemic, we:
  - used the salaries of colleagues who were furloughed at 100%.
  - introduced a homeworking allowance in support of remote working to assist with workstation equipment adjustments.
  - continued with our annual pay review and performance process to review and progress staff recognising people's contribution, skills and development levels, during what had been a very challenging year.

Ongoing initiatives

- We undertake a regular pay equity review, with the next one scheduled during 2021.
- We carry out an equality impact assessment following our key pay reviews (such as the Outcome Zone and professional review) to ensure the impact on staff with any of the nine groups of staff is fair.
- We are looking at how we present and communicate our 'reward' package to prospective and current staff.
- We are reviewing our maternity benefits package to enhance our offering.

Wellbeing

During the past 12 months

- As part of our new Mental Health and Wellbeing Strategy and within an enhance our current provision, we introduced Mental Health First Aid England, Time to Talk, and Executive Mental Health First Aiders who are an initial point of contact and support for anyone needing assistance with their mental health.
- During the pandemic, we ran a wellbeing review which encouraged colleagues to reflect on their personal wellbeing as we moved to homeworking and signposted to resources and guidance according to the support required.
- In recognition of the challenges being faced during the pandemic and the intensity of remote working, we introduced 'wellbeing days' for all staff. Alongside our existing annual and special leave entitlement, to encourage time away from work. We also offered a programme of webinars, workshops, new online modules and practical guidance documents, covering topics such as working from home, caring, working from home effectively and overcoming online meeting fatigue.

Ongoing initiatives

- As part of our annual wellbeing programme, we continue to offer sessions on men and women's health, general lifestyle advice and positive mental health. We are currently piloting online yoga and mindfulness classes and providing opportunities for staff to share informal photos of their pets and wellbeing.
- In March 2021, we held our first virtual wellbeing week (Time Out for Tranquility) which was really well attended and offered a variety of mental and physical wellbeing sessions, including talks and events.

Action plans, charters and commitments

- Athena SWAN – following the submission of our refreshed action plan, we achieved an institutional Athena SWAN Bronze award under the revised 2019 framework. The Athena SWAN Charter promotes recognition and progress in advancing women in higher education, and the work undertaken to address gender equality more broadly, not just barriers to progression that affect women.
- Disability Confident – Our commitment to ensuring we are a inclusive employer has been recognised with the achievement of Disability Confident Employer status, an improvement on our previous level 1 status. We have also recently revised our disability policy and guidance for staff. We aim to be exemplary in inclusion, safety and supportive environment where everyone is treated with respect and dignity in line with our University values.
- LGBT+ – we signed the University Diversity Champions programme to support us in our work to create a more diverse, inclusive, gay, and trans policies and practices.
- Charters – we are one of the world's leading universities for defence and security education, research and consultancy. we have pledged our support for the Armed Forces Covenant, the Defence Employer Recognition Scheme and Nolan Charter. We were also the first university to sign up to the UK's Women in Aviation and Aerospace Charter and the only university to sign up to the Oil Change the Race Ratio initiative.

Our Gender Pay Information has been prepared in accordance with our duty under the Equality Act 2010 (Specific Duties and Public Authorities) Regulations 2017 and the Equality Act (Gender Pay Gap Information) "Managing Gender Pay Reporting".

The data has been extracted from our HR & Payroll database and is based on a snapshot taken on the 31 March 2020.

Our bonus and recognition pay data is based on payments made within the preceding 12 months ending on the snapshot date (1 April 2019 to 31 March 2020).
