

National Manufacturing Debate

21 May 2019

Timothy Curtis
Senior Lecturer, Social Innovation

Tim Curtis is an internationally renowned academic and practitioner in the field of social & environmental innovation & entrepreneurship, whose 25 year career experience has been dedicated to helping people, communities, and organisations make decisions in complex and confusing situations. He is also adept at getting decisions made when he is not in charge. He has worked in environmental decision-making, in policy and law and in community development, for governments, major companies and community associations.

Now, working at the University of Northampton, his focus is on the nitty-gritty theory and practice of community organising and social innovation. He has taught Entrepreneurship, International Development and Social & Community Development students how to make decisions in and with communities, but also coaches and undertakes paid and pro-bono consulting work for third-sector organisations, most recently co-founding Intensive Engagement, a social change organisation working on neighbourhood policing.